Master of Arts in Emerging Media

Current Loyola undergraduate students may apply for Loyola's Master of Arts in Emerging Media, a graduate-level communication degree that prepares students to take on the evolving digital landscape of tomorrow.

Program Overview

- 33 credits
- 100% online & asynchronous
- Full-time in 12-15 months
- Part-time in 2-5 years

Fast Track to Success

Undergraduate students from any area of study may apply beginning in the spring semester of their junior year. Accepted students can then take one online graduate course in the final semester of their senior year. The course simultaneously counts as an undergraduate elective and a graduate requirement for the M.A. program. Seniors may also apply via the fast-track application, which allows early acceptance to the program following successful bachelor's completion.

Guide your study by choosing an optional specialization:

- Health Communication
- Content Development and Strategy
- Digital Culture

Double Greyhound Discount

The $60 application fee is waived for current undergraduate Loyola students. All undergraduate Loyola students are also eligible for a 15% Double Greyhound tuition discount for Loyola alumni.

Be More Than Just a Number

Class sizes are small and incorporate personalized interaction between students and faculty.

Expand Your Potential in Any Career

Our program prepares you to not only explore new media's role in communication disciplines, including journalism, public relations, advertising, social media, and marketing, but also thrive in any field you work in—from music, to healthcare, to the non-profit sector.

Throughout my program, I've felt like the faculty were my teammates. They are collaborators and facilitators in my education rather than lecturers. There is genuine care for my success and well-being.
